

PHILOSOPHY (PHIL)

PHIL 100 Introduction to Philosophy Credits: 3

Philosophy is a subject that studies the most fundamental questions in life: How should we live? Is there a God? Do we have free will? What does it mean to know something? What can we know? What makes something morally right? What is the nature of good and evil? This course introduces students to some influential philosophical thinkers and some of the most important issues in philosophy.

PHIL 303 Ethical Issues in Professional Life Credits: 3

This course builds upon the research, critical writing, information literacy, and persuasion skills developed in ENG 151 by examining the broad range of ethical issues and dilemmas that occur in professional life.

The term professions refers to very specialized knowledge or expertise that serves the public good. Professionals have particular duties and responsibilities. Students will learn about the duties and responsibilities of their intended careers by reading articles about important issues in professional ethics, studying their fields Code of Ethics, and writing about ethical issues in professional life. Topics to be discussed include: the meaning of profession, how to be ethical, professional duties, honesty, privacy, confidentiality, integrity, loyalty, whistle-blowing, professionalism, justice, social welfare, governmental regulations, and conflicts of interest. As in the other Ethics courses in the Liberal Education Program, students will also be encouraged to think about the difference between ethical decisions and non-ethical decisions, how they make ethical decisions, and who will be affected by those ethical decisions.

Pre-Requisite : ENG 151 OR EMLS 151

PHIL 310 The Philosophy of Sex and Gender Credits: 3

This course is an introduction to issues in philosophy relating to sex and gender, including questions about what it means to identify and be identified as male or female, and how gender structures social and personal realities. The course reviews different kinds of feminist critiques of Western philosophy and their counter-arguments, as well as philosophical analyses of sex and gender as they relate to ethics, social philosophy, theories of human nature, and theories of knowledge. The course gradually works toward positive theories of sex and gender, including biological determinism and post-modern approaches to the body, and explores contested norms of gender equality in contemporary issues. No philosophy background is assumed.

Goal: Goal: 07- Human Diversity

PHIL 322 Medical and Bioethics Credits: 3

The course would explore ethical dilemmas that occur in the professional practices of medicine, biological research, nursing, public health, and the social and behavioral sciences. Its theoretical foundation is philosophical moral theory and its methodology emphasizes the philosophical skills of analysis, argument, and evaluation. The assessment of value involves critical scrutiny of medical practices and biological techniques, some historical, and some of which are unprecedented in human history. As a society, we continue to struggle with questions about what constitutes fairness and goodness in the pursuit of health, and we are on the cusp of developing medical techniques that promise to forever change our understanding of the good life. Emerging from the philosophical branch of ethics, and premised on the three moral principles of respect for autonomy, beneficence, and justice, the aim of this course is to expose students to ethical debates in health care and biological research, and to help them assess moral dilemmas that occur in the practice of medicine and biological research.

PHIL 432 History of Philosophy: Knowledge and Reality Credits: 4

This course is a historical survey of major works in metaphysics and epistemology, the fields that cover foundational questions about the nature of reality and claims of knowledge. Students will further develop their writing, research, and critical thinking skills by examining questions such as: What is the nature of reality? Is this the only reality that exists? Could the universe be different than it is? Are mind, body, and spirit different substances? What is truth? What is knowledge? How can we acquire knowledge? Can we trust our senses, or should knowledge derive from pure thought? Possible historical figures covered include the pre-Socratics, Plato, Aristotle, Rene Descartes, David Hume, Immanuel Kant, W.V.O. Quine, and Richard Rorty.
